

Movers and shakers

Michael Reinitz earned an MBA with Specialization in Project Management at Aspen University. He feels every business assignment can be broken into a project and his degree from Aspen gives him the needed information to effectively manage projects .

#

Michael Reinitz graduated from Aspen University with a Masters of Business Administration with Specialization in Project Management. Reinitz talks about his Aspen experience and how he feels Aspen produces the movers and shakers of his generation.

Why did you choose Aspen University?

The deciding factors came down to accreditation, degree specialization and the ability to control my specific school schedule.

What appealed to you about your MBA program?

Generally speaking, just about every business assignment can be broken down as a project. To be successful, organizations must learn how to be effective in managing projects. Aspen University is one of a few universities offering an MBA with a Specialization in Project Management. With the selection of courses and their highly skilled professors, I believe Aspen is the best school at delivering this degree.

Why does Aspen stand out among other universities?

The university, its program of study, and the students benefit from their professorial selection process. I want to learn from highly respected professionals in my field; I don't want to learn about business from somebody who has only seen the world from behind the binding of a text book. Aspen provides that.

Would you recommend online learning as a study mode?

Some may desire online learning so they can sit in their pajamas and earn a degree. This was never my motivation. I had begun coursework at two "brick and mortar" MBA-granting institution, but left because I was dissatisfied with their programs. When I found Aspen, I found an MBA program that gave me that practical application of concepts I was interested in and looking for. A further benefit I found through online learning was that my tuition was affordable because it was used solely to pay for quality professors and quality resources.

How many hours a day did you spend on your education?

About two or three. Some of this time was spent reading the text. Some was spent researching and answering the discussion questions. The most important time was spent talking and interacting with my fellow students, my work peers and supervisors and my professors in understanding and implementing what I was learning.

How did you motivate yourself? Were you motivated by the professors and other students?

Soon after completing my MBA, I received a promotion to the Continuous Improvement Regional Manager of North and South America for my company. My success is due, in part, to my continual drive for educating and improving myself.

I can also attribute it to associating myself with like-minded professionals. I consider the professors and students at Aspen as “like-minded professionals with a continual drive for educating and improving themselves” on steroids. These people are the movers and shakers of our generation. Want to be motivated? Get to know the professors and students at Aspen and you will become motivated just to keep up.

About Aspen University

The MBA with specialization in project management provides students with the skills essential to operating effectively in corporations and start-ups organized around project-driven teams, as most are today. Because of Aspen's demonstrated commitment to project management and recognized solid professional development infrastructure for the project management profession, the university is approved as a Project Management Institute (PMI®) Charter Registered Education Provider

For more on Aspen University's MBA specialization in project management, click here.