Did You Know?

Before we started using computers at Martindale-Hubbell, each change to a lawyers/firm's listing was done in washable ink on long green galley sheets.

To correct a listing, a tiny bottle of bleach would be used to erase the ink. Also, each lawyer had his own "card" called a "Z" card which was updated by hand. These cards kept track of a lawyer's location, his rating investigations, the firms he joined, and if he was disbarred or disciplined.

Do you have a question about the company's history? A company acronym you don't understand? Or a piece of trivia that you would love to know the correct answer on? (We'll also take answers - we're very willing to be educated by those who've been at the company for a while). Please send us your questions, trivia, or historical facts about LexisNexis and we'll share the information in future articles.
